One day, a man finds the cocoon (茧) of a butterfly and he brings it home. A few days later, the man sees a small hole in the cocoon. He sits and watches for several hours as the butterfly struggles to make its body through that little hole. Then it stops.

So the man decides to help the butterfly. He takes a knife and cuts a bigger hole in the cocoon. The butterfly comes out of the cocoon but it has a weak body and small, thin wings. The butterfly doesn't start to fly.

In fact, the butterfly spends the rest of its life crawling (爬行) around with a weak body and thin wings. The butterfly is never able to fly.

The man acts with kindness but he doesn't understand that he has done something wrong. When a butterfly crawls out of the cocoon, it must struggle. The hard work of getting out of the cocoon makes the fluid (液体) from the butterfly's body into its wings. It helps the wing get strong and be ready to fly.

Sometimes struggles are exactly what we need in our life. If we live our life without any

A study says that smart phone owners usually start to use their phones early in the morning. They check personal emails and Wechat. And before they get out of bed, many people often check the weather, read the news, and send a message or two to friends. After getting up, they often take photos of food, themselves, and even whatever they can see with their phones. They share their photos with their friends. The research finds that users pick up their phones more than 1,500 times to do different tasks in an average (普通的) week. And the smart phone users are on their phone for three hours and sixteen minutes a day. That is to say, people use their phones for almost one full day each week. Using phones will take much time and it's also bad for our health. Many people stay up late to play phones, and mobile phones will influence (影响) our sleep. Without using the phones, many people will feel sad. Many owners also find they use their phones without realizing they're doing so. How do you think people use their phones too much? 71.
