Henderson Island(亨德森岛) lies in the South Pacific. It is only 37.5 square kilometers in area, and is 4,800 kilometers away from the nearest cities. Although no one lives there, you can find objects from as far as China, Russia, Europe and the United States on the island's white sandy beaches. All of these objects are rubbish, especially plastic(塑料).

Every day, about 3,500 pieces of plastic waste, such as toothbrushes and plastic bags and bottles, are washed ashore on the island. Two-thirds of them cannot be seen at first because they are buried(掩埋) about ten centimeters deep in the sand. Scientists estimate(估计) that there are now more than 38 million pieces of plastic on Henderson Island, weighing nearly 18 tons. This has made the remote island a place with the highest density(密度) of plastic in the world.

The large amount of plastic is threatening the wildlife on the island. Many hermit crabs(寄居蟹) have made their homes in small plastic pots which are toxic. Besides, the plastic pollution is likely to deter pregnant green turtles(绿海龟) from laying their eggs on the island's beaches.

Scientists suggest people use less plastic in their daily lives. They are also calling for people to stop
