13 Long time ago in the Han Dynasty (汉朝), a fortune-teller (算命先生) warned a young man that there would be a disaster (灾难) on the ninth day of the ninth lunar month.

The fortune-teller told the young man to take his family to a high place and advised (建议) him that they should drink chrysanthemum wine (菊花酒). He said that if they wanted to escape from (逃离) the disaster, they needed to do what he told them to do. The young man took the fortune-teller's advice and took his family up a hill. They took food and chrysanthemum wine with them. When they came back to the village where they lived, they found that all their chickens, dogs, sheep and other animals were dead. The young man realized (意识到) that the fortune-teller had saved their lives.

Since then, people remember the ninth day of the ninth lunar month by going up hills and drinking chrysanthemum wine. They named this day the Chong Yang Festival. Nowadays, people go hiking or go up hills and sweep the graves of their ancestors (祖先) at the Chong Yang Festival.
