10 Dear Hurst,

I'm glad you are studying Chinese in an international Chinese school, but sorry to learn you get frustrated when finding it hard to get involved into the new class.

I guess the biggest obstacle is that as a newcomer, you may unconsciously feel yourself an outsider. It might also be possible that you are not confident enough to start a conversation with others in Chinese. Accordingly, I'd like to give you some suggestions as follows. First, focus on your new classmates, regarding them as your potential friends, which may draw you closer to them. Second, be active in various activities without caring too much about language mistakes. It's a positive way to improve your language skills. Once you are more involved, a good relationship will happen naturally.

Hope you will soon find a way out and enjoy your stay there.

Yours faithfully,

Li Hua
