Do you want to be successful in everything you do? If so, then how? Here is an example.

There was a farmer who grew corn all his life. Each year he took his corn to the market. Then each time his corn was chosen as the best and won the first prize.

One year a newspaper reporter interviewed him and learned something surprising about how he grew it. The farmer offered his seed corn to his neighbors.

"How can you share your best seed with your neighbors?" the reporter asked, "You know they are taking part in the competition with you each year."

"Why, sir," said the farmer, "didn't you know? The wind picks up pollen(花粉) from the corn and moves it quickly from field to field. If my neighbors grow bad corn, cross-pollination(异花传粉) will affect the quality of my corn. So if I want to grow good corn, I must help my neighbors to grow good corn."

The farmer knows much about the connection of life. His corn can't improve unless his neighbor's corn improves.

As a great man says, "We make a living by what we get; we make a life by what we give. We can't live without food, clothes, and many other things. However, a meaningful life is not decided by how much we can get, but by how much we can give others. Giving, instead of taking, makes us different from other animals. So those who choose to live well must help others to live well and those who choose to be happy must help others to find happiness in their life.

I finally got my driving license last summer. Mom decided to go with me to take my first trip around an empty parking lot. I knew my mother was an excellent driver. She had driven over 20 years without getting one 81. However, I found that she was not the best teacher for me. It wasn't that she shouted, or told me that I was doing 82. Her "helpful instructions" only made me more 83.

Since I could no longer practice with her, the job was 84 in the hands of my father. The idea of learning from Dad was not so 85. He almost never talked. We shared a typical father-daughter relationship. He'd ask 86 school was, and I'd say it was fine. Unluckily, that was the most of our conversations. Spending several hours alone with someone who might be a 87 really frightened me.

As we got into the car that first time, I was not surprised at what happened. Dad and I drove around, saying almost 88. As my lessons went on, however, things began to 89. Dad would turn the radio 90 so I could fully enjoy his favorite music. Then he actually began to 91. I was soon hearing stories from his past, including some of his first meeting with Mom.

I thought why Dad was telling me so much in the car. In all the years that I was always 92 why my father never spoke that much, I realized that it was because I had never stopped to listen. Homework, friends, and even TV had all 93 me away from him, and I never thought my 94 father had anything to say.

Since I began driving with him, my driving skill has greatly increased. More important is that I got to know my father more and more. Just living with him wasn't 95—it took driving with him for me to get to know someone who was a mystery (神秘).

When John was growing up, other kids felt sorry for him. His parents always had him working in the garden, carrying out the trash and delivering newspapers. But when John reached adulthood, he was better off than his childhood playmates. He had got a more well-paid job, a better marriage and was healthier. Most of all, he was happier, far happier.

These are the findings of a 40-year study that followed the lives of 456 teenage boys from Boston. The study showed that those who had worked as boys enjoyed happier and more successful lives than those who had not. "Boys who worked in the home or community were better at dealing with problems and felt more confident. They believed they could achieve very much." said George Vaillant, the psychologist (心理学家) who made the discovery. "And because they felt good about themselves, others felt good about them."

In the study, Vaillant's team compared these men's achievements with their boyhood working experiences. They paid attention to lots of details. They found out the success as adults had a lot to do with the boyhood activities. Those who did the most boyhood activities were twice as likely (可能的) to have warm relations with people around them, five times as likely to be well paid and 16 times less likely to lose their jobs. The study also suggested that IQ and family background made no real difference in how the boys turned out. Working—at any age—is important. Childhood activities, such as part-time jobs, housework, effort in school and the ability to solve the problems help a child develop his abilities, which are keys to a happy world. They also help him understand that people must cooperate with others to realize common goals. The most successful adults are those who know how to do this. Yet work isn't everything. As Tolstoy once said, "One can live better in this world if one knows how to work and how to love, to work for the person one loves and to love one's work."
