But when they were traveling, they worried about their cat, Mr Beebles, who they had to leave at home. Former truck driver Chen Xianjun played a final chord（和弦）on the guitar as he and his band-mates — a salesperson, a farmer and two doctors — enjoyed themselves in the music. Behind them was the photo of a foreigner wearing a warm smile and hugging his guitar. It was 27-year-old Philip Hancock, an Australian teaching English in Chongqing.

Hancock died in May 2018 in Chongqing because of diabetes（糖尿病）. His parents obeyed his wish to donate（捐献）his organs. Hancock's liver and kidneys saved the lives of three people in the band and his corneas（角膜）helped the other two, including Chen see the world again.

"Last year, Red Cross officials suggested we form a band in memory of Hancock. They said Hancock loved music and dreamed of having his own band one day," Chen said. "I'm more than fortunate to be able to do this."

Over the past year, the five "musicians" have learned different instruments in a studio. The Band for One, a fitting name for the group, finally came to Hangzhou on Nov. 7 to celebrate the 10th anniversary of the implementation（实施）of voluntary organ donations in China.

Recently, China's Ministry of Education has asked all public schools to teach students first aid especially CPR (心肺复苏) as part of children's health education.

There are as many as 550,000 sudden cardiac (心 脏 的) deaths in China every year. About 60 percent of these deaths happen outside hospitals. In November 2019, 35-year-old Taiwan model-actor Godfrey Gao died after he suddenly fell while filming a reality show. Although he was rushed to the hospital, he still died from sudden cardiac arrest (停止). His death caused a heated discussion.

CPR is one of the first and most useful methods of treating cardiac arrest, according to medical experts. Most patients will begin to develop brain damage within four to six minutes after cardiac arrest, and then biological (生物学的) death within a few minutes. However, in China, besides medical workers, the number of people who have received first aid training is only about one percent of the public.

As early as 1966, the US has advised the public to receive CPR training, including police officers, drivers, firefighters, teachers and students of colleges and secondary schools. In Europe, Switzerland requires all citizens (公民) to be trained in first aid, including CPR. And in Germany, every citizen must be trained before getting their driver's license. Forty percent of people in France are also trained in first aid.

According to Guo Malong, a doctor in Henan, a CPR lesson can be completed in anything from 45 minutes to 2 hours depending on what's included. Basic first aid lessons can be completed in just 30 minutes, which doesn't cost students too much time, but will make a huge difference to others.

38. The best time to perform CPR is within _____ after one's cardiac arrest.

    A. the 4-6 minutes   B. the 6-8 minutes

    C. the 8-10 minutes   D. the 10-12 minutes

39. Which of the following is TRUE?

    A. 50% of the French have had first aid training.

    B. In Germany, every driver is trained in first aid .

    C. All students must receive CPR training in the US.

    D. People in Switzerland don't have to receive CPR training.

40. What do Guo Malong's words mean in the last paragraph?

    A. It's easy and possible to teach CPR in school.

    B. Basic first aid lessons will cost too much time.

    C. It's important to teach students to learn first aid.

    D. Every student should know different first aid skills.
