Dear Tom,

The outbreak of the coronavirus in China has forced millions of students nationwide to get schooling at home to reduce the risk of being infected. However, it has aroused people's attention whether the online classes will take the place of traditional learning?

The online classes provide us individual a choice of study. We opt to what we need instead of keeping learning what we have mastered. Besides, with the development of the Internet, the resource is another advantage. However, we are not supposed to neglect the aftermath of it. Because it is based on the computer, which makes us easier to be disturbed. What's more, it is hard to adjust to a different approach to learning. Another problem is that some student snap over the class, because the teacher won't notice if he is listening. In summary, like the e-book and the paper book, e-learning and traditional learning both have their significance.

In my opinion, the online classes and traditional learning will coexist in a very long time.

Yours sincerely,

Li Hua
