My daughter Hanghui is six years old. I took her to attend the child modeling course two years ago.

Luckily, she has a gift for being a model. I let her take the class because when she was very young, she was pigeon-toed (内八字的) and I wanted to correct it.

In the past, Hanghui was afraid to go out because she would have to meet so many people. That meant she always stayed at home, so I thought it necessary to take her out more to see the outside world.

After taking the class for more than a year, I noticed her progress. She was not so shy and she dared to speak with strangers. Even on the T-stage (T台), she could behave herself. So attending modeling class was the correct decision for her.

I have read reports about child models working all day to make money, and they may have lost their innocence (纯真). However, I don't feel worried about this, because Hanghui knows the difference between performances and real life. On the stage, she is serious and cool, but after classes or a performance, she becomes a lively kid again.

If she has a chance to be a Taobao or T-stage show model, I won't refuse the invitation. I will support her to do these jobs in her free time if she wants. However, if it influences her schoolwork, I won't encourage it.

Throughout her life, I will respect her choices. Parents shouldn't impose (强加) their dreams on their children, because it's unfair to the children.

- (1) The writer let her daughter take the course in order to ____ at first.
A. encourage her to be outgoing B. correct her habit of speaking

a. She has become more outgoing.

- b. She is able to do well on the stage.
- c. She has lost her innocence.
- d. She has got more invitations from Taobao.

A. ac B. abd C. ab D. bcd

- (4) We can infer (推断) from the passage that ____.
- A. Hanghui doesn't do very well at school
 - B. the writer wants her daughter to be an actress in the future
 - C. the writer has a good relationship with her daughter
 - D. children will surely lose their innocence if they begin making money at a young age
