Journey Back in Time with Scholars

Classical Provence(13 days)

Journey through the beautiful countryside of Provence, France, with Prof. Ori Z. Soltes. We will visit some of the best-preserved Roman monuments in the world. Our tour also includes a chance to walk in the footsteps of Van Gogh and Gauguin. Fields of flowers, tile-roofed (瓦屋顶) villages and tasty meals enrich this wonderful experience.

Southern Spain(15 days)

Spain has lovely white towns and the scent (芳香) of oranges, but it is also a treasury of ancient remains including the cities left by the Greeks, Romans and Arabs. As we travel south from Madrid with Prof. Ronald Messier to historic Toledo, Roman Merida and into Andalucia, we explore historical monuments and architecture.

China's Sacred Landscapes(21 days)

Discover the China of "past ages", its walled cities, temples and mountain scenery with Prof. Robert Thorp. Highlights (精彩之处) include China's most sacred peaks at Mount Tai and Hangzhou's rolling hills, waterways and peaceful temples. We will wander in traditional small towns and end our tour with an exceptional museum in Shanghai.

Tunisia(17 days)

Join Prof. Pedar Foss on our in-depth Tunisian tour. Tour highlights include the Roman city of Dougga, the underground Numidian capital at Bulla Regia, Roman Sbeitla and the remote areas around Tataouine and Matmata, unique for underground cities. Our journey takes us to picturesque Berber villages and lovely beaches.

I don't remember the exact date I met Marty for the first time. Like a lot of people who want to get through a checkout line, I found my thoughts on speed, nothing more. The line I was standing in wasn't moving as quickly as I wanted, and I glanced toward the cashier, who was receiving money from customers.

He was an old man in his sixties. I thought, well, it probably took him a little longer to get the jobs done. For the next few minutes I watched him. He greeted every customer before he began scanning the goods they were purchasing. Sure, his words were the usual, "How's it going? " But he did something different—he actually listened to people. Then he would respond to what they had said and talk with them briefly.

I thought it was strange, but I guessed I had grown accustomed to people asking me how I was doing simply out of a conversation without thinking. Usually, after a while, you don't give any thought to the question and just say something back quietly.

This old cashier seemed sincere about wanting to know how people were feeling. Meanwhile, the high-tech cash register rang up their purchases and he announced what they owed. When customers handed money to him, he pushed the appropriate keys, the cash drawer popped open, and he counted out their change.

Then magic happened.

He placed the change in his left hand, walked around the counter to the customers, and extended his right hand in an act of friendship. As their hands met, the old cashier looked the customers in the eyes. "I want to thank you for shopping here today," he told them. "You have a great day. Bye-bye." The looks on the faces of the customers were priceless.

Now it was my turn. I glanced down at the name tag on his red waistcoat, the kind experienced Wal-Mart cashier wore. It read, "Marty."

Marty told me how much I owed and I handed him some money. The next thing I knew he was standing beside me, offering his right hand and holding my change in his left hand. His kind eyes locked onto mine. Smiling, and with a firm handshake...

- (1) While the author stood in the checkout line, she felt _____.
A. mad B. enthusiastic C. comfortable D. impatient
- (2) In the opinion of the author, people tended to _____.
A. talk about unimportant topics B. develop a mindless conversation
C. remain calm while having a talk D. face communication problems
- (3) Why did the author think Marty was special?
A. He was patient with all the questions from customers.
B. He spent as much time as possible serving customers.
C. He expressed his sincerity while giving back the change.
D. He showed particular interest in customers' personal life.
- (4) What can we infer from the passage?
A. Marty was a talkative man.
B. Marty cared a lot about what he did.
C. The author got along well with others.
D. The author was dissatisfied with such a waste of time.

Sunny countries are often poor. A shame, then, that solar power is still quite expensive. Eight19, a British company by Cambridge University, has, however, invented a novel way to get round this. In return for a deposit (订金) of around $ 10 it is supplying poor Kenyan families with a solar cell able to generate 2.5 watts of electricity, a battery that can deliver a three amp (安培) current to store this electricity, and a lamp with a special bulb. The firm thinks that this system, once the battery is fully charged, is enough to light two small rooms and to power a mobile-phone charger for seven hours. Then, next day, it can be put outside and charged back up again.

The trick is that, to be able to use the electricity, the system's keeper must buy a scratch card (刮刮卡) -for as little as a dollar-on which is printed a reference number. The keeper sends this reference, plus the serial number of the household solar unit, by SMS to Eight19. The company's server will respond automatically with an access code to the unit.

Users may consider that they are paying an hourly rate for their electricity. In fact, they are paying off the cost of the unit. After buying around $ 80 worth of scratch cards—which Eight19 expects would take the average family around 18 months—the user will own it. He will then have the option of continuing to use it for nothing, or of trading it in for a bigger one, perhaps driven by a 10-watt solar cell.

In that case, he would go then through the same process again, paying off the additional cost of the upgraded kit at a slightly higher rate. Users would therefore increase their electricity supply steadily and affordably.

According to Eight 19's figures, this looks like a good deal for customers. The firm believes the average energy-starved Kenyan spends around $ 10 a month on oil—enough to fuel a couple of smoky lamps—plus $ 2 on charging his mobile phone in the market-place. Regular users of one of Eight19's basic solar units will spend around half that, before owning it completely. Meanwhile, as the cost of solar technology falls, it should get even cheaper.

- (1) Where can the users find the reference number needed if they want to use electricity?
 - A. On the battery.
 - B. On the scratch card.
 - C. On the solar unit.
 - D. In the automatic message.
- (2) How much would users pay for the solar cell and scratch cards before they own the solar unit?
 - A. Around $ 10.
 - B. Around $ 80.
 - C. Around $ 90.
 - D. Around $ 180.
- (3) Which of the following statements is true according to the passage?
 - A. Users have to pay for the electricity by the hour.
 - B. Users can get a bigger unit free of charge.
 - C. Users can have access to the solar unit themselves.
 - D. Users may spend less money in the future.
- (4) What might be the most suitable title for the passage?
 - A. Solar Energy: Starting from Scratch.
 - B. Eight19: a creative British Company.
 - C. Kenyan Families: Using Solar Energy for Free.

D. Poor Countries: Beginning to Use Solar Energy.

Supermarket shelves are filled with plant-based alternatives (可代替品) to cow milk, including soy, nut, and coconut milk. These products are popular with consumers who cannot drink cows' milk for health reasons, as well as with those concerned about animal welfare and environmental sustainability. While the dairy-free options work well with cereal or in coffee, they fail miserably when it comes to making milk-based products like cheese or yogurt. However, these shortcomings may soon be a thing of the past, thanks to a new company in California, which has figured out how to create animal-free milk in a laboratory!

Perumal Gandhi and Ryan Pandya founded the company in 2014 after becoming increasingly annoyed with the lack of cows' milk-free alternatives, particularly for cheese. For Gandhi, who stopped consuming animal products five years earlier due to environmental and animal welfare concerns, the motivation to create a better alternative originated from his love of cheesy pizza. Pandya was motivated to take action after being forced to eat some "really bad" dairy-free cream cheese on his sandwich.

The two MIT biomedical engineering scientists decided to join forces to create a more realistic alternative to dairy-based products. In their university lab, the pair spent nine months first isolating (分离) cow DNA then inserting it into yeast (酵母). This genetic change enabled the yeast to produce the necessary milk proteins. The final step of the process involved mixing the proteins with some plant nutrients and fats.

The dairy-free milk not only tastes like the real thing but is also healthier, has a longer shelf life and, most important of all, is Earth friendly. According to the company's website, when compared to conventional (常规的) milk production, their process uses 65% less energy, creates 84% less greenhouse gas emissions and requires 91% less land and an amazing 98% less water! Best of all, since it contains real milk proteins, the product behaves like the cow-produced version, which means vegetarian consumers will no longer have to deal with the unpleasant cheese on their sandwiches and pizzas.

The company plans to bring their creation to market later this year and their first product will most likely be cheese since there are already many good cows' milk products available to consumers.

- (1) What does the underlined word "those" in paragraph 1 refer to?
A. Actions. B. Products C. People. D. Reasons.
- (2) What motivated the company's founders to make the new product?
A. Their deep concern for the environment.
B. Their worry that farm animals were poorly treated.
C. The over-consumption of the dairy-based products.

- D. The poor taste of dairy-free cheese presently available.
- (3) What can be inferred from paragraph 4?
- A. The dairy-free products cannot be stored for a long time.
B. Cow farming causes considerable environmental damage.
C. The new products will taste better than dairy-based ones.
D. The dairy-free milk will be more expensive than cow's milk.
- (4) What's the passage mainly about?
- A. Producing healthier Cheese. B. Protecting the environment.
C. Making milk without cows. D. Reducing the waste of food.

25 If you're going abroad for college, you might be thinking about how to get yourself a safe and cozy home for the years ahead. Of course, dormitories are always a good place to start, but some large state colleges require juniors to live off campus due to the limited number of dorm rooms. 1

How to find a house

2. If you are just a freshman or don't know many people, don't hesitate to approach some upperclassmen in your classes or clubs. More often than not, upperclassmen have more experience with renting and are more familiar with the area your school is in.

Another good idea is to talk to seniors who are currently living off-campus. These seniors' landlords will most likely be looking for new tenants (房客) after graduation.

Also, registered realtors (房地产经纪) might be able to find you a place for a fee. In addition, Facebook groups can also provide some useful information. 3.

Roommates

Having roommates can not only save us some money, but also give us valuable companionship. However, remember that finding the right roommates for you is the most important thing, other than safety concerns. 4, definitely do not lie about your preferences, schedule, or habits, even if talking about them could make you uncomfortable. On the other side, also remember to ask your potential roommates to tell you about themselves in detail.

5, please do everybody a favor by being upfront about it. Constantly running into conflicts with your quiet roommate is definitely the last thing you want.

- A. If you are a party animal
B. While looking for roommates
C. Get along well with your roommates

- D. When having a chat with your roommate
- E. First, you can ask your friends who are already living off campus
- F. However, be really careful if you get in touch with strangers through the Internet
- G. Nonetheless, renting an apartment can give you some hands-on experience with living
